

Marengo

Marengo lies a few kilometres south of Apollo Bay on a small headland named by Nicholas Baudin, captain of the French expedition which mapped the coast in 1802. The Marengo Reefs Marine Sanctuary is a great place to snorkel and dive.

In 1985 part of an ornithomimid dinosaur (small plant-eater) femur (thigh bone) was found at Marengo and in 2010 freshwater crustacean burrows were discovered on the rocky shore platform.

References:

Cate Cousland . "Travelling the Great Ocean Road". Petticoat Publishing 2007.

Photo of Marengo foreshore. Photographer: Lesley Kool